Donald Trump's time in office is running out now that former campaign manager Paul Manafort has flipped and is cooperating with Russia investigators, a Democratic strategist predicts.

On Friday, federal prosecutors announced that Manafort had pleaded guilty to one count of conspiracy against the United States and a count of conspiracy to obstruct justice, and in exchange he agreed to cooperate with the Russia investigation. As CNN noted, the "cooperation agreement" means that other charges would be dropped as long as Manafort provided "successful cooperation."

That could be potentially damaging for Donald Trump and his eldest son, Donald Trump Jr., as Manafort was present at the Trump Tower meeting in 2016 where members of the campaign met with a Kremlin-connected lawyer promising dirt on Hillary Clinton. This meeting, which was arranged by Trump Jr., has reportedly been a major plank of the Russia investigation and the question of whether Trump's campaign colluded with Russia.
